Chocolate, fresh from the mill, as it cools in tin pans, becomes strongly electrical; when turned out of the pans, it for some time retains this property, but soon; leses it by handling. By melting again it may be renewed, c. c. Experiment Experiment with sea sand. Take a pint, or more, of sea sand, and spread it upon an iron plate, or in an iron shovel, and put it over the fire, ami there let it remain till the moisture is all evaporated, and the sand very hot. Pour it as gently as possibly you can from one corner of the shovel into a glass tumbler or jar, and both the sand and the tumbler will be strongly electrified; and will attract any light substance brought near them. Small beach stones, known on the sea-coast by the name of shingle, if dried and heated in the same manner as the sand, and poured into a glass vessel, will be strongly electrified. After succeeding with the two foregoing experiments, I have thought it needless to try any other solid substance; for if sea sand can be made electrical, there cannot be a doubt but that marble, flints, bricks, and even fossils and earths, will, when heated, and poured into glass, produce a similar appearancel have not paid the least attention...
